

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW

The A-PLUS Report™ is an "insurance claims history report" prepared by a consumer reporting agency. There are different agencies that prepare such reports and all compile claims information supplied to them by insurance companies. The insurer-provided data can contain inaccurate information. If you find any errors or incomplete information in your report, you are encouraged to dispute them in writing to the consumer reporting agency that prepared the report. That agency is required by federal law to investigate the dispute. If you are not satisfied with the investigation, you can file a statement that must be included in all future claims history reports issued by that agency.

Where to dispute inaccurate or incomplete information on your A-PLUS Report™:
